Comedian, actor, and writer Judy Gold brings her fury over silencing comedians to the forefront in her new show (based on her recent book) Yes, I Can Say That. Gold takes to the stage “to tell the fascists and crybabies to shove their hate and political correctness up their respective asses.” Co-written with Eddie Sarfaty, directed by BD Wong, and presented by Primary Stages, the evening promises to be full of laughs and a tribute to free speech. Through April 16 at 59E59 Theaters, 59 E. 59th St., NYC. $60-125. 59e59.org. Opens March 4

Comedians and besties McKenzie Goodwin and Rachel Scanlon host Two Dykes and A Mic, a raunchy and hilarious queer show that will have your body rocking with laughter and sexual tension. Enjoy "Gay News," relationship advice with "Ask a Dyke," dating horror stories with weekly "Bumble Fumbles," and fan favorite segments like

“What’s Gayer” and “Who Tops Who.” 8 p.m. at City Winery, 25 11th Ave at 15th St., NYC. $25-30. citywinery.com March 8

Mx. Justin V. Bond returns to the stage with a play list for Julie London's imagined, unrecorded record—a follow up to her under-played, and under-appreciated 1968 pop album "Yummy, Yummy, Yummy," now titled London Calling. Through March 17 at Joe's Pub, 425 Lafayette St. at Astor Place, NYC. $55 plus two-drink minimum.
